lives in one of those places. For $420, you could put your name on the ballot. You can run. You can go back to Washington and you can implement those changes. I think it is ridiculous for us to take legislative time to send back general nonspecific kind of recommendations to the Congress. It is an attempt to say what everybody wants to say. Everybody doesn't like taxes. I don't like them myself, hate them, but for us to send back that kind of resolution, and I certainly want it noted that my name is not on it, because that is about as shallow as we can get. So if you really want to get specific, if you really want to get tough, if you really want to tell them to cut the spending out, then you tell them to cut the Department of Agriculture by 10%, then you tell them to cut this program by 10% and that program. That is an age old game. We want to make the cuts. Well, if we want to get in the middle of it, buddy, let's do it. Let's tell them where to cut it and how to cut it, instead of saying, well, we are against this or we're against that. So I know that Senator Murphy will support my amendment because that will make that an attractive resolution.

PRESIDENT: Senator Murphy. We are discussing the Frank Lewis amendment.

SENATOR MURPHY: I am truly sorry that Senator Lewis did not sign the amendment, but if he cannot read, I suppose he cannot write.

PRESIDENT: Senator Lewis objects to that. Would you refrain from your comments about his literacy, please, Senator Murphy?

SENATOR MURPHY: I apologize for saying Senator Lewis can neither read nor write.

PRESIDENT: Is that sufficient, Senator Lewis? All right, that is not unreasonable. Senator Murphy can write. He wants it in writing. The question is, who is going to read it?

SENATOR MURPHY: Well, I don't know. We went from the flying trapeze to whatever this is. Gentlemen, let me point out one or two things that Senator Lewis is sliding over like he was going by third base. He calls this a shallow resolution, and I grant you, the resolutions we send to Congress in most instances are shallow. They draw no water. We know that but I would call his attention to the fact that the Senior Senator Syas and Luedtke have grave reservations that the action will be too great. This is not a resolution petitioning Congress to do something, period. This is what Congress has done to us so often in the past. It is an ultimatum. Either you put your house in order or we will. Now the calling of a Constitutional Convention, in the second portion, in the alternative of that, is in no way any kind of a reminder, request or anything else to Congress. It says, we, the states, will put your feet to the fire for you. It says this is not a shallow resolution but this is the use of the power of the people to call a Constitutional
